Do you believe that celebrities are ill-treated by the media or it is the price they have to pay for their stardom? Regardless of fame, should their privacy be respected or not?

As the digital age dawned upon us, the emergence of social media platforms prominently changed the way we communicate as well as perceive the whole world around us. While the lives of celebrities have always intertwined with media, they are often mistreated by media outlets especially tabloids that tamper with their right to privacy. The media coverage of a celebrity essentially shapes how they are perceived by the public and it is often said that media holds the power to bring an individual to fame.

In my opinion, the ill-treatment of celebrities by media outlets is quite prevalent. While many believe that it might be the price of being famous, the media still holds the responsibility to give every celebrity that right to protect their private lives. Many famous personalities might utilise the media coverage to maintain a certain image, it still does not equalise to the capacity of manipulation the mass media holds. I definitely support the argument that regardless of fame, every individual's privacy should be respected. Celebrities are also human beings and feel the same emotions regardless of how famous they are. With social media becoming a significant part of everyone's lives, we have more access to follow our favourite celebrity closely as compared to earlier times. On the other hand, celebrities should also be aware of their use of social media and how they are impacting their fans.

To conclude, it is true that media outlets mistreat and tamper with the privacy of celebrities to fulfil their own selfish motives. It is important that every news media outlet follows journalistic ethics and presents its news reports in a fair and objective manner while also ensuring that they are treating celebrities with respect keeping in mind that they also have the right to secure their privacy in the way they want to.
